Cloud Faces — A Glimpse Two

A vast face emerging across the lavender-blue sky, eyes and nose diagonal, faint yet undeniable.

A man’s face in the center—blurred into lavender cloud, asking the viewer to look closer and wonder.

Another watcher—massive face to the left, keeping quiet company over the horizon.

Companions revealed: a lion profile connected to the snout of a horse, two guardians side by side.

Closer look at horse and lion together—their forms pressed in cloud light, fierce yet gentle.

Another angle: horse profile above, lion’s face below, as if layered in protection.

Not only horse—the dragon or snake companion appears nearby, winding forward in cloud form.

Three companions together—horse, lion, and dragon/snake—sharing the same sky canvas.

These cloud-formed faces and companions appeared not once, but again and again, as if wanting their presence recorded. They remind us that the unseen wishes to be witnessed—and through attention, becomes part of the story we tell together.
